PLENARY: Technology and Assessment

Dr. Greg Kessler

Session Abstract:

Technology has transformed education in dramatic ways. We have new ways to communicate through technology and in digital spaces. This has dramatically altered society and social practices as well as how our learners encounter English in their lives. We have the ability to increase student engagement by contextualizing instruction around their interests. We can gather data about student performance and provide them with feedback when it is most salient. These changes have influenced teachers to dramatically alter their teaching. However, assessment practices are rarely aligned with such practices, nor do they address the real language needs of our learners. The presenter will share his thoughts about how we can utilize technology to conduct assessment in more effective, efficient and meaningful ways. He will discuss the changing role of formative and summative assessment and the shift toward various dynamic ongoing assessment approaches.

Presenter:

Greg Kessler is Associate Professor and Program Coordinator of Instructional Technology in the Educational Studies department in the Patton College of Education at Ohio University. He has published extensively and delivered keynotes and featured talks around the world. His research addresses technology, teaching, learning, culture and language with an emphasis on teacher preparation. He is editor of the CALICO Equinox book series, Advances in CALL Practice & Research, and the Language Teaching & Technology forum in the journal Language Learning & Technology, as well as many other comprehensive collections.

Presentation Information / Session Descriptions

9:00-9:40 SESSIONS
Rm. 113	Graded Group Discussions: Evaluating More Than Just Speaking Skills Virginia Robson University of Pittsburgh robson@pitt.edu	AE: Practice-Oriented	Graded group discussions are speaking activities where all members of the group are evaluated on their contributions to the discussions. The presenter will describe how to set up these activities, how to prepare students, and how to grade. Examples of materials, student work and grading rubrics will be shared.
Rm. 112	Teaching Topic Management with Conversation Analysis Havva Zorluel Ozer Indiana University of Pennsylvania	HE: Practice-Oriented	Examines topic management methods in a three-minute conversation from a movie. Illustrates examples of methods used to engage in four topic management practices: topic initiation, topic pursuit, topic shift, and topic termination. Argues for the use of conversation analysis to teach topic management to English language learners.
Rm. 111	Principles to Teaching US Culture &amp; Cinema to English Learners Sylvia Shipp Chatham University sshipp@chatham.edu	HE: Practice-Oriented	Research shows that presenting American films can be a beneficial way for English learners to gain insight into US culture. But using films can also improve academic skills and knowledge. This presentation demonstrates how teaching US Culture &amp; Cinema in an IEP can benefit students' knowledge, skills, motivation, and fluency.
Rm. 110	Creating Effective Assessments for Learning Outcomes in the Saudi TESOL Context Arwa Alshehri Indiana University Pennsylvania arwa_alshehri@outlook.com	IEP: Practice-Oriented	Despite the fact that many TESOL studies have emphasized the importance of specifying student learning outcomes, EFL assessment practices still need to be checked before declaring them reliable for assessing learners' language performance. Such EFL assessment practices, therefore, require a framework for better planning, better implementation, and better learning outcomes.
Rm. 102	Creating Effective ESL Assessments with the Help of Web-Based Tools Mykhaylo Zakryzhevskyy SUNY Plattsburgh mzakr003@plattsburgh.edu	HE: Practice-Oriented	In this session, the presenter will introduce the audience to various ways how instructors can create effective ESL assessments measuring learners' progress in several language skills using such web-based tools as Quizlet, Kahoot, and Newsela. Several sample assessment materials created using these tools will be shown during the presentation.
Rm. 104	Remember Your Audience: Reflecting on the Feedback Process Janine Carlock Duquesne University carlockj@duq.edu	IEP: Practice-Oriented	When commenting on student work, teachers often do not remember their audience: novices, who lack an expert's frame of reference. This session offers ideas on how to structure the feedback process and the chance to reflect on current self-practices to make the process more productive.
Rm. 106	Planning/Customization/Implementation of Vocational ESL Courses for Post-Hurricane-Maria Puerto Rican Adults Seungku Park Slippery Rock University seungku.park@sru.edu	IEP: Practice-Oriented	This research describes a local community's challenges and overcomes in the process of support for post-hurricane-Maria Puerto Rican adults in western Pennsylvania. Further, it investigates development of customized vocational ESL curriculum and its successful implementation by a local university's ESL program for the adult Puerto Ricans' settlement in the US.

Rm. 107	Providing Comprehensible, Beneficial Speaking Feedback and Assessment Heather McNaught University of Pittsburgh hlm44@pitt.edu	IEP: Practice	Assessing and providing feedback on students' spoken English can be very challenging. This practice-oriented session will provide one teacher's approach to giving meaningful feedback not only on formative in-class activities, but also assessing summative spoken assignments. Teachers will leave the session with practical ideas to implement in the speaking classroom.
9:50-10:30 SESSIONS
Rm. 113	Adult Learning Theory and the Adult ESOL Classroom Alexis Cherewka Penn State University atc5068@psu.edu	AE: Research-Oriented	This research draws on the comprehensive adult learning theory entitled The Three Dimensions of Learning (Illeris, 2002). The presentation will examine the key principles of this theory, identify the role of language within the learning process, and consider potential implications for teaching English as another language to adults.
Rm. 112	Individual Differences in Foreign Language Learning: A Case Study Hatice Sofu, Havva Zorluel Ozer, & Ceyhan Muftuoglu Cukurova University	AE: Research-Oriented	This case study examines motivational orientations and language learning strategies of a Turkish adult learner of English. It reveals that the participants' motivational orientations for learning English as a foreign language are significantly driven intrinsically. The study shows that the participant most frequently used Metacognitive and Social Strategies.
Rm. 111	Successful Collaborative Writing Requirements Ahdab Saaty Indiana University of Pennsylvania A.A.Saaty@iup.edu	HE: Research-Oriented	Do you think successful collaborative writing is possible? This presentation illustrates several successful collaboration requirements to avoid failure in collaborative writing projects. It shows how it is important in collaborative writing projects to consider task design, participants' readiness for collaboration, and the way collaborative work will be organized and delegated.
Rm. 110	Writing Discrete-point Items for Reading and Listening Comprehension Assessment Rob Mucklo, Dawn McCormick, & Heather McNaught University of Pittsburgh rom17@pitt.edu, mccormic@pitt.edu, & hlm44@pitt.edu	TE: Workshop	The purpose of this workshop is to review factors in creating discrete-point items to assess reading and listening comprehension. The presenters will share information on item types and considerations between type and proficiency. Participants will practice designing items for a given text and receive feedback.
Rm. 102	Creative Writing: Benefits for Language Learners Marina Razagarin Chatham University mrzagarina@chatham.edu	IEP: Practice-Oriented	Creative writing though important for personal and linguistic growth of students finds limited application in Intensive Language Programs. What is missing in many classrooms are tasks that support the improvement of learners' creativity in writing. This presentation focuses on demonstrating the benefits of practicing creative writing in the Second Language learning setting.

Rm. 106	Formative Assessment Modalities in Saudi EFL Mansoor Almalki & Arwa Alshehri Taif University English Language Centre Indiana University of Pennsylvania msamalki@tu.edu.sa & arwa_alshehri@outlook.com	IEP: Research-Oriented	Investigating Saudi TESOL context, there is a demand not only for technology integration, but also for assessment practices that offer reliable evaluations of the language proficiency. There appears to be a need in Saudi for language assessments that can be productively used for the purposes of institutional enrolment and other certification purposes.
Rm. 107	Harness the Organizational Power of Topic Sentences in Speaking Class Carol Harmatz Duquesne University & University of Pittsburgh cah100@pitt.edu	IEP: Practice-Oriented	As ESL writing students become proficient in constructing clear topic sentences, they learn to think in “threes,” as they develop paragraphs with three supporting ideas. Speaking classes can exploit the same clarity of thought by encouraging students to do the same in both impromptu speeches and more formal presentations.
10:40-11:20: INTEREST SECTION ‘MEETINGS’
These meetings are not “official interest section meetings” but a chance to communicate with other professionals working in contexts with similar pedagogical foci. Consider discussions related to the conference theme: assessment. Drop by to meet new people or catch up with friends before heading to the plenary!
1:40-2:00 SESSIONS
Rm. 113	A Guide for Reading Assignment Sheets Ahdab Saaty Indiana University of Pennsylvania A.A.Saaty@iup.edu	HE: Teaching Tip	Do your students find it difficult to read writing assignments sheets? Do you think creating writing assignments is challenging? This presentation provides a guide for students to better read, understand, and follow writing assignments prompts. Also, the presented guide helps instructors in designing and evaluating writing assignments for language learners.
Rm. 112	Grading Participation: Literature Circles in the Classroom Sarah Bradshaw Indiana University of Pennsylvania 1SNBradshaw@gmail.com	PK12: Teaching Tip	Grading and providing feedback on student participation is a perpetual challenge. How do we make these points mean something?

Rm. 102	Sharing Lesson Ideas: Autobiographical Narrative Assignments in Research Writing Courses Jun Akiyoshi Indiana University of Pennsylvania kbvv@iup.edu	HE: Teaching Tip	In this teaching tip session, the presenter will share his idea about how to use an autobiographical narrative writing assignment in college research writing class. Since autobiographical narrative can be a meaningful student-centered pedagogical approach, the presented idea will be applicable both in ESL writing and composition classrooms.
Rm. 104	Yes, and: Using Improv in the IEP Classroom Jacqueline Gianico Penn State University jmg565@psu.edu	HE: Teaching Tip	In improv, "yes, and" means being supportive and adding to the narrative. In the classroom, "yes, and" can frame instructors' personal and pedagogical goals. In this highly interactive session, attendees practice being present, being supportive, and story-telling via activities that can be used in class for a variety of learning outcomes.
Rm. 106	Multi-Literacies for EFL Students: A Project-Based Design to Learn English Jawad Golzar Indiana University of Pennsylvania jawad.golzar@yahoo.com	HE: Teaching Tip	The session aims to delineate processes that both teachers and learners engage in a multi-literacies pedagogy project to design what they learn and learn what they design; moreover, it takes into account socio-cultural aspects of English language learning. Finally, participants will learn ways to implement the multi-literacy framework in the classrooms.
Rm. 107	Listening Rhetorically in the Classroom Ingrit Olivin Tanasale Indiana University of Pennsylvania i.o.tanasale@iup.edu	HE: Teaching Tip	A classroom is a contact zone for students from various cultural and social backgrounds and experiences. This situation can prone to conflict if students cannot tolerate the difference. This teaching activity/tip stems from the rhetorical listening theory, allowing students to develop their awareness by listening reflectively and critically.

Rm. 110	Using the Experiential Learning Cycle as Teaching and Learning Approach Mariana Syrotiak Gannon University syrotiak001@gannon.edu	TE: Workshop	This presentation looks at the importance of direct experience in L2 and its impact in language acquisition. Engaging students in meaningful experiences combined with reflection, conceptualization, and application, will build the foundation which students can draw upon in their learning process.

Rm. 102	Poster Sessions (HE & IEP): See below.
Rm. 103	Sentence-Writing and Comprehension Checks on Students' Phones with Socratic Bill Price University of Pittsburgh wcp5@pitt.edu	IEP: Workshop	This computer lab workshop will showcase Socratic, a website that enables you to create online activities that students can use their phones or laptops to complete in class. Rm. 107	Mr. Dog and the North-American /r/: A Shameless Pronunciation Technique Brian How Gannon University how001@gannon.edu	IEP: Practice-Oriented	The North-American /r/ phoneme is rare in other languages, difficult to describe, and still more difficult to reproduce in the student's L2. This mini-workshop will demonstrate a method to induce students to recognize, reproduce, and retain this roughtish phoneme.

Poster Sessions: 2:10-2:50 ELJ Rm. 113 & Rm. 102

TE / Rm. 113	Initiating and Taking-Turn Conversation of a Conversation in Cultures Said AlHarthy Indiana University of Pennsylvania lightfrompast@hotmail.com, vbvv@iup.edu		The beginning of conversation differs from a culture to another. For instance, the initiation and turn-taking of a conversation distinct between Eastern and Western speakers when speaking. Introducing verbal and non-verbal differences to students assist them to avoid misunderstandings others from different contexts due to cultural practices.
TE / Rm. 113	Analyzing the Characteristics of a Professional English Language Teacher Sayed Ali Reza Ahmadi & Sukano Roy Indiana University of Pennsylvania sayed-ali.reza@fulbrightmail.org		This poster investigates the six main factors (language proficiency, disciplinary knowledge, pedagogical competence, research awareness, contextual understanding, and interpersonal skills) that have persistently (re)shaped English language instructors' professional identity. It also illustrates how these elements construct the teachers' professionalism and reciprocally affect the students' performance.
TE / Rm. 113	Creating Your Own Language Learning Forum for Reflection Between Conferences Andy Decker Chatham University adecker@chatham.edu		Inspired by an affiliated university with its own language learning forum, the IEP at Chatham University is creating its own forum for reflection between conferences. The presenter will share how the idea is being applied within an IEP as well as how to apply it within your language learning setting.
TE / Rm. 113	Using Edmodo in Teaching Writing: An Effective Technological Platform Ever Jami Muhammad Indiana University of Pennsylvania nzxy@iup.edu		This research presents a new technological innovation with its unique features, as number one highly effective platform for students' writing skills who can join from all over the world-- only with a code. This online platform connects teachers and students to a larger audience and community of experts, for free.

	Writing Self-Efficacy: Effective Methods and Resources to Foster Writing  Jawad Golzar  Indiana University of Pennsylvania  jawad.golzar@yahoo.com	This research-based poster explores ESL students' writing self-efficacy level, its relationship with some contributory factors like writing achievements, previous experiences and self-regulatory practices. It also investigates the resources that learners use to expand related self-efficacy, and provide effective and contextualized methods to foster this socio-cognitive construct and improve writing success.
HE/ Rm. 102	International Students' Curriculum Perception and the Decrease or Increase of a Possible Writing Anxiety  Yacoub Omar  Indiana University of Pennsylvania  dnvx@iup.edu Application of Grammar Checker in EFL Writing Instruction  Shuzhen Zhang  Indiana University of Pennsylvania  helenshuzhenzhang@outlook.com	Tinto's (2017) triangular model of the three dimensions, sense of belonging, self-efficacy, and perceived value of curriculum, is purposefully designed to come to a thorough understanding of students' persistence. I claim that the dimension of perceived value of curriculum is important to understand international students' persistence in a first year college writing course. The effectiveness of grammar checkers to writing courses is still controversial. This poster reports the application of the grammar checker in an EFL writing class. It presents two issues: how willingly the learners would like to use the tool and how much help that they obtained from it.
IEP/ Rm. 102	Halloween Escape Room  Kathy Kehl  Gannon University  keh1002@gannon.edu	Last October, I created a Halloween themed Escape Room to encourage my ESL students to collaborate and learn about our culture. My poster presentation will display photos and further explain my strategy.
